

One person who inspired me during quarantine was Matt Groening because he gave me lots of the comedy I needed during quarantine. Just in case you didn't know,he is the creator of the comedy The Simpsons. Matt Groening inspired me to become an animator,and that is something I want to do as an adult and I really think The Simpsons is hilarious. During quarantine,and now as well,we need as much comedy as we can.So I thought he would be a great person to write about. I know he is probably not the person you would think someone would write about for an essay about someone who inspired me.

I need to mention my awesome family,who have supported me during the pandemic from the minute I heard school had shut down,my mom was there to support me.

My dad has always been there to help me,from helping me log into my classroom online,to encouraging me to keep going,and not to give up. To even my sister,who has been keeping me sane while I play as many games as I can with her. I just needed to mention them because with my family around,I don't feel like Covid - 19 even exists.

I would also like to mention everyone at my school,for playing with me at recess, my teachers,for helping me learn and keeping my mind from thinking about corona. To even some Youtubers,for teaching me about some things about food,movies,videogames,and many other things,because[you may not understand] I love comedy and learning,and many Youtubers do this really well. I just needed a moment to think about the many people that help me keep on going through quarantine. Also my school has been helping me a lot,by helping me learn. So thank you,everyone who has been there for me. Because the admiration of my family is all that's keeping me going. So I hope my family loves this essay,and I hope you do too. So if you enjoyed this essay,please don't thank my family,for being the inspiration of this essay. We have been through a lot with my grandfather passing away,and with coronavirus the year after we have been going through a lot.
