Toni Morrison once said, "Make a difference about something other than yourselves,". This means that making a difference can change the slightest things in the world. To make a big difference or to help make the world a better place can be a hard task though not impossible. Doing the slightest things to help the world be a better place I think it's important to change things, and to help people and the world be better. You can help even just by picking up garbage or being friendly to a neighbor or by helping a friend. Toni Morrison was a great author and poet. She was very inspiring and won many awards. She was born in Lorain, Ohio and was the first African American woman to win the Nobel Peace Prize. I want to make the world a better place where people are dependable, kind, and loyal.

Making a difference about something other than yourself doesn't just mean to change the world, it can also mean to affect the lives of people or to change the way we live today. You, me, or anyone else can work to change the laws that we will have in the future. If you don't try, then you don't want to change the world enough. The quote above inspires me so much and also means a lot to me. I want to change the world because it is cruel and people need to stop being so hateful. This is an important topic. Other important topics are that pollution has been at its all time high and inflation is also at its all time high. Showing leadership and loyalty is important too. Responsibility is a big thing, even when doing something small. In conclusion, making the world a better place means to not be self-centered.
