

Mackenzie Jade Jones
Elementary School: K - 5 (5th grade)

Toni Wofford Morrison once said... “ If there is a book you want to read, but it hasn't been written yet, you must write it yourself.” I find this quote to be very uplifting. I interpret this quote as a message saying not to wait around and waste your life yearning for an opportunity by somebody else, but to give yourself that opportunity. Finding the strength to open pathways for opportunities takes a lot, but you can do things to give yourself that energy to do great things., In addition, another way you could view this quotation is by telling yourself “don't let others control how you write your story, the way your chapters flow is in the fate of your hands”. This is another way I can interpret this quote. The feeling of wanting for something that is yet to be, can be very challenging to ignore. But giving yourself the satisfaction of creating something grand is a wonderful thing, and this quote gives out that message. Wasting away is the grasp of despair knowing the fact that what you wish for and wait day by day for will never come, is something you can escape. It may take your whole life to satisfy your needs, but in the end it will be worth it.